

Botswana offers to send 20,000 elephants to Germany

9 hours ago

By Jacqueline Howard, BBC News

Share

The president of Botswana has threatened to send 20,000 elephants to Germany in a political dispute.

Earlier this year, Germany's environment ministry suggested there should be stricter limits on importing hunting trophies.

Botswana's president Mokgweetsi Masisi told German media this would only impoverish Botswanans.

He said elephant numbers had exploded as a result of conservation efforts, and hunting helped keep them in check.

Germans should "live together with the animals, in the way you are trying to tell us to", Mr Masisi told German newspaper Bild.

The country is home to about a third of the world's elephant population - more than 130,000.

Herds were causing damage to property, eating crops and trampling residents, he told Bild.

Botswana has previously given 8,000 elephants to countries such as Angola, and has offered hundreds more to Mozambique, as a means of bringing the population down.

"We would like to offer such a gift to Germany," Mr Masisi said, adding it was not a joke and he would not take no for an answer.

Botswana banned trophy hunting in 2014, but lifted the restrictions in 2019 after facing pressure from local communities.

The country now issues annual hunting quotas, saying that it provides a good source of income for the local community and that the practise is licensed and strictly controlled.

It has previously considered using elephants for pet food.

Germany is the EU's largest importer of African elephant trophies, and hunting trophies overall, according to a 2021 report by the Humane Society International.

- T'm afraid that elephants will kill me'
- Elephant 'corridors' - where locals take care to cross

A spokeswoman for the environment ministry in Berlin told the AFP news agency that Botswana had not raised any concerns with Germany on the matter.

"In light of the alarming loss of biological diversity, we have a special responsibility to do everything to ensure the import of hunting trophies is sustainable and legal," she said.

The ministry, however, remained in talks with African countries affected by import rules, including Botswana, the spokeswoman said.

Australia, France and Belgium are among countries that have banned the trade in hunting trophies.

In March, UK MPs voted to support a ban on importing hunting trophies, but the legislation has further scrutiny to pass before becoming law.

A pledge to ban the import of hunting trophies was included in the Conservatives' 2019 general election manifesto.

|  |   |
|--|---|
| Elephant 'corridors' - where locals take care to cross | T'm afraid that elephants will kill me' |
| Botswana holds elephant hunting auctions               | Botswana lifts ban on elephant hunting  |

- Germany
- Botswana

Related

Germany kit option blocked over Nazi symbolism

1 day ago | Europe

Will legalising cannabis unleash chaos in Germany?

2 days ago | Europe

The FSB bicycle assassin Putin wants back in Russia

3 days ago | World

More

19 Jan 2024

Botswana's female polers changing stereotypes

Cindy Mothogaathobogwe steers wildlife safari tourists on a Mokoro canoe through the Okavango Delta.

Africa

21 Aug 2023

Botswana media guide

An overview of the media in Botswana, including links to broadcasters and newspapers.

Africa

6 Aug 2023

Elephant 'corridors' - where locals take care to cross

The difficulties facing people living next to Botswana's growing African elephant population.

Science & Environment

3 Jul 2023

Botswana country profile

Provides an overview of Botswana, including key dates and facts about this southern African country.

Africa

1 May 2023

Cyclist finishes coast-to-coast ride across Africa

Cardiff cyclist Matthew Myerscough's epic journey includes dodging wild elephants.

Wales